Historical note

One of the earliest Academy faculty members to reflect a modernist sensibility, Henry McCarter was affiliated with the Pennsylvania Academy for almost forty-five years. As an Academy student from 1879 to 1882, he studied under Thomas Eakins, but Eakins’s emphasis on realism alienated the dreamy McCarter, whose interests were already leaning toward illustration. More influential was McCarter’s five-year stay in Paris in the late 1880s where he worked with such artists as Pierre Puvis de Chavannes and Léon Bonnat, and apprenticed in the lithography workshop of Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec.

By 1895 McCarter had established himself in New York and commenced a long and successful career as an illustrator. About 1900, McCarter was asked by Academy Director Harrison Morris to teach an illustration class. He moved back to Philadelphia and remained as an instructor until his death in 1942.

McCarter began to work more frequently in oil painting around 1920, concentrating on landscapes and flower studies. His work is characterized by beautiful draftsmanship, vibrant colors, and a love of the fantastic. Many of McCarter’s foremost artistic concerns — experimentation with nonliteral color, attention to light effects, and a desire to visually represent sound — are evidence of his modernist mindset. His openness to new ideas influenced his students, who included the important American modernists Arthur B. Carles and Charles Demuth.

Scope and Contents note

The paintings register, titled “Register of Paintings Distributed to Former Students and Friends after the Artist’s Death,” consists of about 275 3 x 5 inch index cards. Each card carries a description of a painting, measurements, and information on exhibition history and disposition of the work. About half of the cards carry no title. The register seems to be the work of his executors. Pencil annotations record the number for paintings included in the memorial exhibition of 1944. Disposition of the works is typed on the back of the cards and there are other annotations made as late as 1956.

Also see the Elizabeth Spalding collection for an unpublished paper about McCarter.
