Historical note

Violet Oakley -- illustrator, muralist, writer, and pacifist -- played a prominent role in the artistic life of Philadelphia for almost half a century. She was affiliated with the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts in many ways: as a student (1895-96); as a faculty member (1912-17); as an exhibitor (1896-1959); as well as a founding member of the alumni Fellowship. Exhibitions of her work have appeared at the Academy in 1900, 1901, 1919, 1947, 1950, and 1997. Oakley’s illustrations for books, magazines and poems, strongly influenced by Howard Pyle, appeared in many popular publications.

Oakley was also well known as a mural painter. She executed three large mural cycles for the Pennsylvania Capitol in Harrisburg between 1902 and 1922, as well as commissions for several churches and schools in the Philadelphia area.

Oakley was a co-founder of several Philadelphia cultural organizations. She was also internationally known as a pacifist, a proponent of disarmament, and a supporter of the League of Nations. Remaining active until her death, she started the “Great Women of the Bible” mural for the First Presbyterian Church of Germantown when she was over seventy years old.

Provenance note

The collection came to the Academy from the Violet Oakley Memorial Foundation in 1987. The Foundation was formed after the death of Violet Oakley to disseminate her works and estate. The Foundation was run by Edith Emerson, Oakley’s companion, and a board of trustees. A large collection of manuscripts and other memorabilia was given to the Archives of American Art by the Foundation shortly after Oakley’s death. After Emerson’s death, the remaining art materials at Cogslea, the Oakley-Emerson home, were given to the Academy.

The 1987 gift contained significant quantities of material that seemed to be part of the collection given to the Archives of American Art in the 1960s. Accordingly, the photographs, manuscripts, annotated books, and dummy copies were transferred there. One copy of each piece of printed matter was retained for the Academy’s archives. In addition, the Academy retained numerous works of art including drawings, pastels and some oil studies, several copies of Oakley’s illustrated books (The Law Triumphant and The Holy Experiment), and many sets of unbound plates from each.
